

Harold Fisher

Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou has given,
and shall not soon depart.

He who from zone to zone,
Guids through the boundless sky thy thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread
alone,
will lead my steps aright.

The Ten Trails

One cold winter morning two Indian who lived in a valley went hunting together.

One whose name was Hapeda was very fleet and strong. The other chatun who was weaker but very patient.

They had not gone very far before they came upon a fresh track of a young deer. Chatun decided to follow it, but Hapeda scorned it. He sought bigger game, so one went one way and the other went another way.

At night they both met again. Hapeda had spent the whole day following many trails and got nothing, but and was very tired and angry, but chatun had followed the one trail and returned to the meeting place with the small deer on his back.
